ATARI ANNOUNCES THE EUROPEAN LAUNCH OF 'HOT PIXEL' ON PSP

LYON, FRANCE – 22 June 2007 – Atari today announced the European launch of HOT PIXEL, the pixellated mini-game paradise for Sony PSP™ (PlayStation® Portable). Developed by zSlide, HOT PIXEL brings frantic snack-size gaming to European PSP gamers for the first time, with over 200 riotous mini-games taking inspiration from old school gaming and the new school digital lifestyle.

In HOT PIXEL the player guides his skate geek character through an average day in his pixellated digital world, taking on a series of increasingly weird and comic quick-fire mini-games ranging from the subtly eccentric to the wildly outrageous, borrowing some choice moments from Atari's colourful video game past along the way.

"HOT PIXEL is an inspired vision of video-gaming, taking in tons of crazy and cool influences to create a game with ridiculous surprises waiting round every corner," said Alex Enklaar, Product Manager, Atari Europe. "It's a fridge full of perfect gaming snacks and fills a hole whenever and wherever the urge hits with some of the best and most original fun you can have with your thumbs."

Players need to come armed with an open mind and fingers of fire if they want to conquer the hundreds of weird and wonderful scenarios in HOT PIXEL. One second it's entering a pin code with a shaky hand, the next guiding an isometric spaceship through a pixel canyon, followed by a spot of digital zit removal. And if you've ever wanted to eat one of those confusing graphs you see in newspapers, now's your chance.

With 140 chaotic mini-games in the box and 70 more available for download at www.hotpxl.com from launch, HOT PIXEL is available now at retailers across Europe.
